Outdoor life. Frontier and pioneer life.
The High Sierra raised its first major barrier 34 miles out of Sacramento. Here, an immense mound of glacial debris confronted the pioneer builders. Chinese laborers hand-carved a V-shaped cut, inch by inch, through the concrete-like mass—800-feet long and 63-feet high. It was here the construction superintendent Strobridge lost an eye in a blasting accident. SP photos by Alfred A. Hart, official CP photographer, Sacramento.

Central Pacific locomotive "A.A. Sargent," named after the U.S. congressman from California, is pictured by Alfred Hart as it appeared at the foot of "J" Street in Sacramento during 1865. Number 7 on the Central Pacific roster, it was built by A. Booth & Company, San Francisco, for the pioneer Sacramento Valley Railroad, a short line from Sacramento to Folsom. It arrived in Sacramento on the river schooner 'A. Lincoln' December 12, 1865. It remained on the CP-SP roster until 1911 when it was scrapped as number 1487, having been rebuilt in the interim several times. The building that was the Brannan House became the Tremont Hotel, reknowned a few years later for its excellent meals and good beds. The steps at the right lead to the old Central Pacific station. It is interesting to note that his area of Old Sacramento is being restored today and that a transportation museum, duplicating the stations of the Central Pacific, Sacramento Valley and California Steam Navigation Company.
